“ I remember all the funny things Jim told me about. How he would tell the trail riders that he could tell the exact time of day by looking at the sun. He would take off his cowboy hat and look up in the sky. But, what he was really doing was looking inside his hat where he had hide a time piece and with that he could tell them the time. Of course, they were amazed at this keen ability he had. He also showed me the tree where he had installed and electrical socket saying that the tree had been hit by lightening once and now he used it for an electrical source when he was out on the trail. One night, when he was bartending, he was eating some blackberry pie and before I came to the bar, he hide the pie, smeared some of the blackberry on his beard, and convinced me it was blood. So many stories and so many wonderful memories. RIP Jim.
