“ Back in 1978, me, Tony, our daughter and my mom drove out west in our van to visit Bob & Joyce. We had a really nice time, they had a beautiful home. One really fun memory was going to KnottsBerry, there was a show demonstration that I was especially tickled by me and Joyce, it was some sort of an illusion where the room we were standing in at one end was real tall and we looked so short and then so short and we were so big, we were both feeling like we had to walk bent over, it was so weird, you would have had to been there to experience it, Joyce almost didn't make it out of there because she was laughing so hard. Joyce also gave me a really good recipe that year for a dessert that was soon to take our country by storm - Watergate Salad! What a really special lady with a laugh that could light up the world:)
